Violence resulting in the woman's death is overtly sexualised by the title banner. The fetish reference directs the viewer to interpret the main image in a sexually stimulating manner. The woman's full nudity further sexualises the scene. Her killing is expressly related to sexual matters in the caption, which includes strong sexual vernacular. The publication overall has an overtly salacious tone. The computer image file format in which the material is stored and presented is also significant, with characteristics best suited to optimise the quality of reproduced photographic images and to facilitate easy transmission and proliferation of the image among similarly oriented individuals.

Referring to New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990 considerations, the Classification Office considers that the limit on freedom of expression resulting from this classification is reasonable and demonstrably justified, given the aim of the Films, Videos, and Publications Classification Act 1993 of preventing likely injury to the public good.
